

WHAT EVERY CLINICIAN NEEDS TO KNOW ABOUT VIOLENCE RISK ASSESSMENT

Presenter: David Shapiro, Ph.D., ABPP

Friday, October 25, 2019 ♦ 9:00 a.m. – 12:00 p.m.
Fort Lauderdale, Florida

Practicing clinicians are frequently called upon to make statements about the ability to predict future violent behavior. In clinical practice, this often occurs when there is a tragedy such as a school shooting and clinicians are faulted for not having accurately predicted the violence. In a forensic context, clinicians are often asked to determine an individual's potential for violent behavior as part of a broader forensic evaluation, such as competency to stand trial, involuntary commitment, or the ability to leave a psychiatric facility. The actual research in this area is quite limited despite the constant demands from the legal system for certainty. This workshop will cover the major research studies, court cases, and assessment instruments used in these areas.

Level of Curriculum Content: Intermediate
