Technically sound and clinically useful measures of adaptive behavior are necessary for accurate decisions regarding eligibility for a variety of special education programs. Adaptive behaviors are those daily activities required for personal and social self-sufficiency that allow an individual to function with others in school, work, and community settings. When planning for intervention, it is imperative that the instruments used to assess adaptive behavior be contemporary, developmentally appropriate, and clinically useful in identifying the needs and strengths of individuals as they confront salient developmental challenges across the lifespan and within their unique environments.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES

Participants will be able to:

- Compare and contrast the fundamental differences between the Vineland-3 and ABAS-3.
- List the different ways in which the Vineland-3 and ABAS-3 can be administered and scored.
- List several advantages of the semi-structured interview format for adaptive skills assessment.
